In this interpretation, there were times when I struggled. I have noticed that in the times I struggled I had several omissions. After watching it back, some were conscious strategic omissions to aid my processing time and catch up, while other times they were unconscious omissions. I think I had omissions at times due to being cognitively saturated and unable to make a mental picture while Reshma Saujani was speaking about. One example of a strategic omission is when she was talking about her various endorsements that she had. I had included one then added other places endorsed her but left out the names. An example of an unconscious omission is when she discussed she had raised money from a group called the "indian undies". I noticed a couple times in my interpretation, there were times when more ASL features could be used. For example, when she was repeating what her pollsters had said, I could have used constructed dialogue. If I could reinterpret this piece I would try to make a mental picture to make my interpretation more clear and use more ASL features.
